

Nourishment for the Neshama

<http://lvracha.com>

Wednesday, April 25, 2007

On Eliminating Hatred

The Creator does not want us to kill each other. He said so in the 10 commandments. External rectification of sin (either ours or that which we perceive in another) is not what this life time is for. This lifetime is for internal spiritual growth and attachment to Him.

In all good conscience, I think these points need to be contemplated. Hatred needs to be dissected and neutralized. Freedom to serve Him needs to be preserved even at the risk that some may not find their way (in the judgment of the one who desires to judge another, may he respect the free will system as it has been established and recognize the patience of the Creator towards every person). Yet forcing one's values upon another does nothing for that person's spiritual growth, does nothing to help that person use his free will to choose properly and thereby earn eternity with a treasure house of merits, which is built choice by choice.

Each person is responsible for their own soul. No one should be harming another's soul and claiming that they are doing this to serve the Creator. In fact, harm that we inflict on others may be the cause of the other person coming closer to the Creator, but the one who does the inflicting, the pain generated will be brought to bear on that person, no matter what their intention is. That is the truth.

All the people of the world, please understand that the Creator is real and runs the world, no matter what nation we are. He is the only truth. There is no contradiction in Him. He is good and does good. Let us all strive to be patient and lovingkind, just like Him, and thereby we will be close to Him, and in that merit, may He make Himself apparent in this world and bring the utopia that we are promised. May this come about today.